SUBFLOOR

Rosco SubFloor With WaveLock™ Technology

You Can Install It Yourself!

Rosco SubFloor was developed and tested by dancers to insure the perfect combination of resilience (spring or bounce) with stability. It is flexible enough to absorb the energy from a dancer's impact but provides the right amount of resistance for dance movements ranging from ballet to tap and including folk, modern, flamenco and Irish dancing.

Most users will be able to install the Rosco SubFloor on their own. The 42" x 42" panels lock into each other with the unique WaveLock™ design. Perimeter pieces, 4 $\frac{3}{8}$ " wide, lock the entire floor together. Rosco SubFloor systems can be bolted to concrete or wood floors and can also be removed and re-used in case of a change of venue. Customizing Panels can be used when building wall to wall. Panels weigh only 40 pounds each.

Roscotiles

This unique, rugged floor product is 100% vinyl in 3 foot (.914 m) by 3 foot squares, making it easy to pick up and put down. Originally designed for video production facilities, each 1/8" (3 mm) thick, 12 pound tile is designed to lie flat for temporary, as well as permanent installations. While Roscotile is designed not to break or crack during typical use, the tile format makes for easy replacement should one or more tiles be gouged by a sharp object. The tiles typically have a low luster sheen, but can be buffed to a high gloss using Rosco Floor Wax. Available in White, Black and TV Grey.

Installation – For temporary installation, tiles will lie flat on their own, although Rosco floor tape may be used to secure the edges. For permanent installation, a professional flooring contractor should be consulted. All tiles should be stripped of their shipping coating with professional cleaning equipment and Rosco Heavy Duty Floor Cleanser and be protected with Rosco Floor Wax. For permanent installations, use only Rosco adhesives (see page 63).
